STAKEHOLDER STORIES
Sharing the work; sharing the wins.

Learn. Plan. Act.

This summer we all watched, transfixed, as a mother mourned.

Never has the plight of southern resident killer whales been so visible and undeniable. Never has the orca's cry for salmon, the very sustenance it depends on for survival, reverberated so broadly. For us, it meant digging in even deeper to the work we do to restore salmon and steelhead populations for all.

We are experiencing fragile times in the Salish Sea. Orca whales and salmon—our twin icons—are but two casualties of the battering forces of population growth, human development, and climate change. Better understanding of the many threats facing these beloved species will be essential to helping them recover.

To build that understanding and restore abundant populations of salmon and orcas, we must appreciate the importance, and limitations, of scientific research; be agile in response to emerging information; be willing to act boldly, even in the face of uncertainty; and quickly bring together the resources, people, and political will to drive real results. These are the hallmarks of LLTK's work.

We identify key problems impacting salmon recovery, then help to advance scientific understanding of those problems and align what's needed to facilitate swift, effective, strategic solutions. Our approach is to work with others, be efficient, and ensure the widest possible support.

LLTK's work sets science into action, demonstrating what is possible when research is translated into tools we can all use to advance toward salmon recovery. We are putting healthy fish into Northwest waters, improving understanding of the obstacles facing their survival, and engaging the public in stewardship on their behalf.

Going into 2019, we carry with us many satisfying successes. But the loss of Tahlequah's calf in August and another of J pod's calves, Scarlet, in September, affirmed what we already knew instinctively—it is not enough. For 17 days Tahlequah told a story that no human words, or annual report, could adequately convey: We must do more. This is our home, and it would never be the same without our orcas and our salmon.

We invite you to join us.

Jacques White, LLTK Executive Director

2018 HIGHLIGHTS

Fish in Streams

LLTK has shown how hatcheries—when driven by science—can contribute meaningfully to salmon recovery and sustainable fisheries without endangering wild fish. Our programs rescue once-imperiled populations from the brink of extinction, support fishers, uphold tribal fishing rights, and even help feed and save hungry orcas.

2018 IMPACT

- 20X SUMMER CHUM RETURNING TO HAMMA HAMMA RIVER
- 1ST CHINOOK RETURNING TO SKOKOMISH RIVER IN 65 YEARS
- 28X SUMMER CHUM RETURNING TO LILLIWAUP CREEK
- 5K CHINOOK CONTRIBUTED TO SUSTAIN FISHERIES & ORCAS

Infrastructure

How does the built environment impact the natural one? For salmon, big infrastructure can have unintended consequences, hindering migration and resulting in serious impacts to survival. By using science to direct action at the Ballard Locks, Hood Canal Bridge, and Middle Fork Diversion Dam, we have helped develop, build support for, and implement successful solutions.

2018 IMPACT

- $65M REVERSAL IN PROPOSED FEDERAL FUNDING CUTS
- $23M SECURED FOR BALLARD LOCKS IMPROVEMENTS

Public Engagement

Whether we fish for them, honor them in ceremony, depend on them for our livelihood, or watch them spawn in neighborhood streams, we are all salmon stakeholders and we all have a part to play in their recovery. By crafting compelling new ways for the public to engage with salmon, LLTK is building a new generation of advocates.

2018 IMPACT

- 20+ PLACEMENTS IN TV & PRINT MEDIA
- 7M+ SOCIAL MEDIA IMPRESSIONS

PARTNER PROFILE BRIAN RIDDELL

President/CEO
Pacific Salmon Foundation

Our Canadian partner on the trans-boundary Salish Sea Marine Survival Project, Brian was a visionary driver in co-developing this international effort. He has been invaluable in helping to raise the funds needed for its expansion and success.

"Through his work, Brian leaves a lasting legacy for future generations."

WWW.2018AR.LLTK.ORG

Scott Brenner
Hood Canal Coordinating Council

"A success story in the making, the progress of summer chum recovery in Hood Canal suggests that delisting is actually possible. LLTK has contributed in major ways, and the result is not just one restored salmon stock, but restored hope."

Jaki Smack
Horizons Elementary

"As an educator, I strive to help my students develop awareness about the effects of our activities on our environment. LLTK's Survive the Sound program provided a fun way to bring the value of ecosystem stewardship right into my classroom."

Charles Costanzo
American Waterways Operators

"I've had the pleasure of partnering with LLTK to obtain operational and maintenance funding for the Ballard Locks, and what we've been able to accomplish is an extraordinary example of coalition work at its best."

BE PART OF SALMON RECOVERY

Your gift to LLTK is an investment in the future of salmon. The return on that investment is healthy wild fish swimming in wild rivers, amidst a growing human population and a vibrant economy. Make your tax-deductible contribution today via the enclosed reply envelope or online at www.lltk.org/donate. Thank you.
